Title : Cookery and Dining in Imperial Rome Author : Apicius Commentator : Frederick Starr Translator : Joseph Dommers Vehling Release date : August 19, 2009 [eBook #29728] Language : English Other information and formats : www.gutenberg.org/ebooks/29728 Credits : Produced by David Starner, Sam W. and the Online Distributed Proofreading Team at <http://www.pgdp.net>  START OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK COOKERY AND DINING IN IMPERIAL ROME  Transcriber's Note The original text used a Prescription Take symbol, P, to indicate recipe numbers. There are also some characters with a macron or overline (straight line) above them. You may need to adjust your font settings for these to display properly. The many inconsistencies in hyphenation and use of accents and ligatures have been preserved as printed, with a few exceptions. Variable and archaic spelling has also been preserved. A full list of amendments and other notes follow the end of the book. A considerable number of the recipe and page numbers in the index are incorrect; however, they have been preserved as printed. The transcriber has, as far as possible, linked to the correct place in the text. Where the reference could not be determined, the numbers remain unlinked. Greek titles of the ten books point to a common Greek origin, indicating that Apicius is a collection of Greek monographs on various branches of cookery, specialization such as highly developed civilizations would produce.
Both the literary style and the contents of the books point to different authors, as may be seen from the very repetitions of and similarities in subjects as in VI and VIII , and in IX and X . The absence of books on bread and cake baking, dessert cookery indicates that the present Apicius is not complete.] BOOK I. THE CAREFUL
